THE Advertiser furnished its last exhibition of folly and absurdity last week. The instance did not transcend former efforts, for that would be quite impossible, but it was quite up to the reputation previously established, in these respects. It gave another instance of the fact, that if any citizen has, after a long residence, been doesned worthy, by the King, to serve the public in an honorable place, it is sufficient eason for traduction and insult. So constant is this habit, that it was only a few days since that a suggestion being made to a gentleman, that his services, in the line of his profession, might be of value to the unfortunate, he replied to the effect
